26. - 28. sorulan aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

A) Although aardvarks look like anteaters, they are actually related to elephants! But wait – what's an aardvark? A small mammal called the aardvark was named by South Africans in the early 1800s. This name comes from Afrikaans, which means earth porcupine. The name describes a large, heavily built animal with thin hair and short legs, that looks like a pig. Aardvarks live in Africa, south of the Sahara Desert. The aardvark can reach a weight of 1.8 metres. Its head has huge nostrils, a long snout, and extremely long ears. They have a long, strong tail, which they use to dig holes in the ground to sleep during the day in an underground burrow. At night, they come out to search for their favourite food – ants. They break open the ant nests with their massive, flattened claws and then suck up the insects with their long tongues. Aardvarks give birth to one baby every year. A few weeks after it is born, the baby aardvark begins to follow its mother around. It goes off to live on its own before it is one year old.

B) According to the passage, the aardvark's name is quite suitable because —
 A) of its donkeylike ears and long nose
 B) it eats a lot of pig meat
 C) it is from South Africa
 D) it is related to the pig family
 E) of its resemblance to a real pig

The unusual mammal called the aardvark was named by South Africans in the early 1800s. In the local language, Afrikaans, "aardvark" means earth pig. The name aptly describes a large, heavily built animal with thin hair and short, stout legs. The scientific name of the aardvark is Orycteropus afer. Aardvarks live in dry places in the south of the Sahara Desert. An aardvark can reach a length of 6 feet (1.8 meters). Its head has huge donkey-like ears, a long snout, and drooping eyelids with long lashes. During the day aardvarks sleep in underground burrows. At night, they break open their favourite food, termites. They break open the termites' nests with their massive, flattened claws. Then they suck up the insects with their long tongue.
